Country buildings often bristle with lightning-rods which are not only no protection to the building, but which increase the danger of injury or destruction from lightning. The peripatetic lightning-rod vender, as a rule, is a scourge to the community in which he operates. He uses cheap and imperfect conductors, useless points and attaches the rods in a manner that makes them incapable of conducting a charge of electricity. The Times says:

What is the Matter What has become of the Democratic threat to carry to the Supreme Court the question of Speaker Reed's right to count a quorum? Is it possible that the Democratic side has been advised by its attorneys not to "monkey with that buzz-saw?"

In this connection the following from Harper's Weekly is worth quoting:

"In the debate upon counting a quorum we do not remember to have seen the case in Zanesville, O., cited, in which the Supreme Court of the State ruled some years ago in accordance with Speaker Reed's view. At the election of the Clerk of the City Council, the Republican members refused to vote A legal opinion was given by Republican counsel that a quorum being actually present when the vote was taken, the Democratic clerk was elected by the vote cast. The vote was taken to the Supreme Court of the State, composed of four Republicans and one Democrat, and the Court held unanimously that the Democratic clerk was legally chosen. the Democratic clerk was legally chosen. This, we believe, is consonant with the rule laid down by the courts whenever the question has been raised."
